Monkey See....Monkey Do....

From across the ditch, a new form of social dysfunction has developed known to its victims as planking. The behaviour presents with symptoms of dystonia and flexion of the extremities whilst lying flat on a variety of awkward surfaces. This relatively new condition exhibited widespread effects throughout Australia and has now inched its way into the lives of many kiwis throughout the country. It is a highly infectious with its prevalence centred around young university students such as the individuals displayed below.

The unsuspecting victims of planking are forced to perform the act in order to conform with the 'norm' created by plankers. Unfortunately it has infiltrated the students of pharmacy school. The victims spiralled into a frenzy of planking after observing their Australian rivals embrace the activity. In an attempt to match their fellow counterparts they began to plank anything and everything they could find. There were no limits. Trees, rubbish bins, mailboxes, statues, and even café counters ( possibly unhygienic? ). Being the serious plankers they are, they even posted their photos to demonstrate their so called "accomplishments"? Have a look on the next page.....
